

In a small village, far away from here, where the nights are long, sultry and oppressive, she was forced to sleep under the stars. In the middle of the night, out of nowhere, there was a big strange beast standing beside her. The beast took her between his jaws and crept slowly away into the darkness. Her whole body was paralyzed and she was afraid of the unknown. Her long hairs dragged through the wet mud like snakes, and, afraid to let go of her tears, they stung in her eyes like knives. She looked up pleadingly, hoping for even the smallest ray of hope. She encouraged herself:

*'If I wake up tomorrow,
it would all have
been a dream.'*
